
Subject: Re: May I use z parameter for notch as engine tractiveEffort?

Posted by Joerg von Lingen on Thu, 09 Oct 2014 07:00:28 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Dear Utah,

your assumption is correct. The structure of ValueTable allows to define a 3D matrix of values. The effort curve is normally given as effort vs. speed but there might be another parameter like notch position or line voltage etc to define a group of curves instead a single one.

Best regards,
Jörg von Lingen

Yutaka Manchu wrote on 02.10.2014 09:40:

```
> Dear All,
>
> Some engines have an acceleration/power control lever with several > notches.
> Each notch limits the acceleration/power level of the engine.
>
> To express this notion, I'd like to confirm the correctness to use z > parameter of valueTable written in > " http://wiki.railml.org/index.php?title=RS:valueTable_tractiveEffort", as
> "z" is the additional parameter extending the dependency to  $y = f(x,z)$ > and "In case of several curves versus the x-coordinate there is the child > element <columnHeader>, which takes the values of the z-coordinate as > parameter for the array of curves."
>
> According to "http://wiki.railml.org/index.php?title=RS:columnHeader", it > could be expressed as followings;
>
> <vehicle id="ve_6000-Mc1" name="6000-Mc1" length="9.0" speed="60.0" > bruttoWeight="3145.8" bruttoAdhesionWeight="393.2">
>   <engine>
>     <propulsion id="peMotor" powerType="electric" power="1105000" > rotationMassFactor="1.0" description="Motor"> >       <tractiveEffort>
>         <valueTable xValueName="Speed" xValueUnit="km/h" > yValueName="Tractive Effort" yValueUnit="N" zValueName="Notch" > zValueUnit="1">
>           <columnHeader zValue="1">
>           </columnHeader>
>           <valueLine xValue="0.0">
>             <values yValue="5950.1" />
>           </valueLine>
>           <valueLine xValue="36.5">
```

```
>         <values yValue="4200.0" />
>     </valueLine>
>     ...
>
>     <columnHeader zValue="2">
>     </columnHeader>
>     <valueLine xValue="0.0">
>         <values yValue="10016.1" />
>     </valueLine>
>     <valueLine xValue="35.0">
>         <values yValue="8200.0" />
>     </valueLine>
>     ...
>
>     </valueTable>
> </tractiveEffort>
> </propulsion>
> </engine>
> </vehicle>
>
> May I ask you if my understanding is right?
>
> Best regards,
> Utah (Yutaka Manchu)
>
```
