

---

Subject: Re: More concise usage of namespaces

Posted by Torben Brand on Tue, 11 Dec 2018 11:35:04 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I agree to the cleanup.

But i understand Dev: as «development» not as common descriptions/ general guidelines. There are multiple Dev: pages that i see as development suggestions and NOT as community consensus. For that purpose the pages make sense

I see the use case for a label for items that span multiple schemas and we also have and need development pages.

We should choose between the following model for the page structure:

A. Use «Dev:» as today for everything not an element or use case. But clearly mark the pages as beeing a cross schema description or a development page.

B. Move all «Dev:» pages with development into the Wiki «Discussion» tab pages (which are little used today) and

B1 keep all cross schema description pages in «Dev:»

B3 rename the remaining «Dev:» pages with cross schema description into «Desc:»

C. Split the current Dev: pages into:

1. «Dev:» for development page
2. «Desc:» for «Descriptive page» for pages with a cross schema description.

D. Add a page label «CL:» for «code list» which will become more and more important.

I suggest to go for option B (either B1 or B2) with also D as nice to have.

--

TOBR

---